Improvements are being made constantly, and at the present time the grounds are in the loveliest condition. The attractions at Olentangy for those who wish entertainment, are numbered by the hundreds. This show will remain at the park during the entire month of July, giving two free performances each day, in the arena at the north end of the grounds. Mr. Hill has this year a show unequalled of its kind. With the organization are a large number of bucking bronchos, on which the cowboys and plainsmen of the company perform marvelous feats of horsemanship. There are a number of high class horses with the show this year also. Horses which do high school feats, hurdle and broad jumping and so on. With the show this year Mr. Hill carries a Mexican Band, which will furnish splendid and characteristic music at each performance. Some of the features of this remarkable free attraction are a Mexican Bull Fight, dances done on horseback, lariat throwing, the lynching of a horse thief on the Western plains, relay races and a dozen other interesting and exciting feats of the plainsmen.

Another free attraction at the park is the music. Each day two delightful band concerts are given by J. Wylie Powers and his popular band. These concerts are largely attended by the residents of Columbus.

The Olentangy Stock Company, the finest stock company in the United States, gives each week a splendid performance of some new play in the park theatre with matinee performances Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

A Centennial Story of 1813

By ARTHUR TROWBRIDGE

It was during the early part of the nineteenth century that a young man and a girl were walking on one of the benches of the New Jersey coast not far south of New York city. That region is now taken up with summer residences and hotels, but it was then a desolate ocean shore, inhabited only by country people who dwelt there all the year round. That the pair strolling on the beach were lovers was evident, for at times they walked hand in hand and at times the man's arm encircled the girl's waist. They were soon to be married and were talking over their plans.

The young man, Edgar Hart, was to go the next day to New York to take a business position; the girl, Dorothy Ten Eyck, was to begin preparations for her marriage, which was to take place in a few weeks. It was dusk when they finished their walk, Edgar Hart starting to walk northward to his home, a mile away; Dorothy Ten Eyck to go to her father's house up on the bluff, a short distance back of the beach. On the way she passed the house of Mother Van Gans back, who stood in the door.

"It's bad luck for you, Dorothy," said the old woman, "that you've taken up with Edgar Hart, who is going to the city, where he'll meet finer birds than you. You'll not see him again in these parts."

"You will prove a false prophet, Mother Gansback. Edgar is true as steel."

"Just wait and see," replied the other, and, turning her back on the girl, who was struggling to repress tears at the malicious thrust, she went into the house.

Edgar had agreed to post a letter to his sweetheart as soon as it would be convenient for him to do so after reaching the city. He was to start at daylight the next morning and hoped to reach New York by evening. If he wrote the next day Dorothy might get a letter from him by the post on the fourth day after he left her.

The morning after their parting Dorothy stole away from home to go to the place where Edgar had given her his last kiss. She reached the edge of the bluff and stood looking down on the ocean. The crew of a British vessel anchored not far from the shore was making preparations for sailing. She was a man-of-war, and had the couple not been absorbed in each other the evening before they would have noticed her standing down the coast from the direction of New York. Dorothy saw a man on the deck waving something white, but only for a moment, since an officer ordered him to join those engaged in hoisting the sails. Dorothy surmised that a sailor seeing a woman on the shore was inclined to salute her. The ship sailed away.

When the fourth day after Edgar's departure came round the post rider left no letter for Dorothy. She was sure one would come for her the next day, but she was again disappointed. When a week had passed and no letter came Dorothy was much troubled. Passing the house of Mother Ten Eyck, the old woman called to her, asking what word she had heard from Edgar, and Dorothy was obliged to say that she had not heard at all.

"I didn't think he'd go back on you so soon," said Mother Ten Eyck. "Well, you'd better choose some young man who is content to stick to the plow and not waste your time waiting for one who is ambitious to become a city fad."

Dorothy, stung to the quick, was about to hurl the words back at the old woman, but repressed the impulse and, turning her back, went her way. Weeks, months passed and no word came from Edgar. Dorothy was too proud to seek him, but at last one of the neighbors, who had business in New York, when there went to the place where Edgar was to have been employed and learned that the young man had not appeared according to appointment. When Dorothy heard this she was filled with forebodings worse than her distress at being neglected. She feared that her lover had been murdered.

"He went away to get rid of her," said Mother Ten Eyck. "He never intended to stop in New York. He's gone back to his folks in England."

Every one except Dorothy accepted this explanation. But Dorothy had faith in her lover. She told of having seen a man on a ship wave to her the day after Edgar's departure, and this was interpreted by her neighbors to mean a farewell from her lover to her.

Eighteen months passed, when one day the missing man walked into Dorothy's home alive and well and caught her up in his arms.

This was his story. The night he left Dorothy, while walking on the beach, he saw a boat approaching. When it touched the shore half a dozen men sprang out, took him forcibly into the boat and out to a ship that had just dropped her anchor. He had been captured by a press gang for the British navy.

The next morning he saw Dorothy on the beach and tried to attract her attention, but was ordered to duty in hoisting sails. He had been compelled to serve the interval since his capture in the British navy and had received quite a sum of prize money, with which he had at last succeeded in making his escape. He married Dorothy, and with his capital he opened a small store in New York.
